

Sign Language Workshop

Sign language is useful when working with people who have hearing impairment in social work settings. Seventy-three students from the Associate of Social Science in Social Work had their initial exposure to sign language in March 2017.

Students found the learning process interesting. In particular, they gained empathetic understanding about the difficulties faced by people having hearing limitations. They found it an amazing experience to appreciate the strengths and potential of people having hearing limitations who are also their trainers. Some used their newly-learned sign language to show their care and respect to their teachers in their photos.
